Dear [redacted]

STAT

The corrected transcript arrived this morning. Many thanks for allowing us this final imposition on your good nature.

While your remarks may strike you as rambling "if not almost incoherent," they contain a treasure-trove of insights and useful suggestions for us. One's recorded conversations seldom have the grace or precision we expect of the written word, but they serve as invaluable checks for us all the same.

Thanks as well for your additional comments and suggestions. Your report that RH never allowed the use of the word "however" is a small detail, but tells us something of the mind and work habits of the man. I had not known of this insistence on his part. (And I fear I would be judged a chronic offender.)

I had a good visit in Houston with our friend there, who spoke most warmly of you.

Best wishes to you, and many thanks for your warm hospitality and your many valuable contributions to our history.

Sincerely,

/s/
